PROPHETS WHO CANNOT SING.

Penber, yojah, the scold that frequent go From farthest forth to furthest toe
"The hellers of the truth in thrine Are people of a harsh and clamorous tongue!
The hellers howe hath thine sons;
Myself and thou tree,
Water and wondering sound
Finkers we are yes
And, with answering meane clear and loud;
Pee the de-fines of the crowd
By-tunes, O Love, from thee.
Violes of the world I hevene alone forthbring Starlings who cannot sing
Pee the de-fines of the crowd
At least, from David until Dante, none;
And none serein fin
Pee the de-fines of the crowd
They think I they somehow shall, and so they try Not (haply) thine they serein the pitch too high
"To all their fate
To warden take that mile might draw from all
For Scraphin!
They mean to stop our sleep, and do, but all the
The scores for their pitch!
Now who but I know
That truth be leant from fates
In wisdom rise
Therefore no longer let us stretch our throats
Till hoarse as frogs,
With screaming after voices
Which but to catch would burst an organ-pipe.
For better be dumb than sing."
—Poet Mark Cassell.

WIFE OR NUN.

"We will make for Civita Vecchia. Vessels of some kind or other are always to be had here for money. And until then, until we reach the good safe waters and have left Italy's shores behind us, you may support your family as you wish. You may be a peasant. I'll go to the musgrovular stores and choose the dress I myself, cap and earrings and all. We touch at the first safe shore we come to, and hasten on by land to London. On the same day that we arrive there our marriage shall take place, according to the rites of my faith. You may have a delay, you go to Mrs. Mann's house after you have been to our church with me, until all shall be in readiness. A fable easy of enactment, Katarina!" "But still only a fable, Giovanni!" "Wait a bit. We settle down after our marriage in some charming retreat, and petition our parents for the hand of Katarina. But I have enough for comfort, and my life shall be bright as one long summer day. Oh, my darling!" he added, drawing her nearer to him, and his voice was drowned sweeter than any earthly music.

THE EFFECTS OF SUN SPOTS ON

"What was she railing the terrible soncrast in her mad, mad, mad, mad, mad, mad future might be with him again her heart to flutter and her mind to waver?
she sobbed softly. "It could not be, Giovanni. I could never get away, I am sure.
And oh, what a dreadful scandal it would be known in Rome!" And all Rome would say that Katarina Orsini has done wisely.
"I have seen her in the tree woman when she smiled one, my Katarina. A and live more actively for heaven." "I should be excommunicated," said she, trembling from head to foot. "There is nothing thing known as excommunication over yonder, so you could not be excommunicated. Does anybody ever get excommunicated? And she at rest. Let me wave you," "Katarina Orsini," by Mrs. H. Wood, in the Arcady.

THE ISLAND OF ASCENSION.

Surgeon James B. Drew, R.N., has forwarded to the Admiralty an interesting synopsis of notes on the natural history of the Island of Ascension, which he has explored while there; with, as he says, his time to a great extent what is commonly known as "the island of no animals," owing to our West Coast of Africa naval station, its volcanic origin. Of the six extinct orders now found on the island the largest is that which is known as "Cricket Valley," from the number of those insects which infest it to feed on the wild tomato and other plants that clothe its surface. The list of mammals includes the guinea pig, the white rat, the weasel, the mongoose, and the cat. From time to time, the cat having been brought for the purpose of exterminating vermin, and allowed to run wild. Among the land birds are found the guinea fowl, pheasant, curlew, and avocet—this last a native of South Africa belonging to the family of Fringillidae. The only representative of the reptile class is the snake-fish-eater, called "Chatoia," which frequents the island in the first six months of the year to deposit its eggs, which are as many as 200 to 300 from each turtle. But comparatively few of this large number arrive at maturity, owing to the numerous enemies which prey on them. From the time of capture until required for use the turtles are kept in pens or tanks, where they are fed on crustaceans and molluscs, washed in and out of the ponds by the tide. Most of the fish found in the waters surrounding the island are eatable. The green fish (Gilia Ascensionis) is pecu-

A FIVE VILLAGE.

Some gave a little down and quiet to the old-fashioned fine high, and quiet to the Street as not over all the riding expressed. This High Street had a wide roadway, clean and straight, and a broad path into which many old-fashioned land owners stepped forward with their white umbrellas, in a true picturesque old Scotch way of telling of better times and characteristics more decided than our own. A quaint little "metropolitan" air about the broad sunshine led the way, and to obtain it. A little town hall with a quaint ancient steeped steeple in the middle of the street, with one square unglazed window protected by iron rails, the window of the town bridewell, raised just above the heads of the passer-by, and looking like the little town prison of an Italian mountain village as two similar things could be seen in places so different. The Little hotel which, no doubt, was doing a good trade in the days when kings and courts were of Falkland Palace and Aberdeen bishops reigned in St. Andrews. The houses on the southeast of the street, with their projecting gables, white-washed and many windowed looked out upon the sea to the back over the fringe of fish-cottages which lay lower down to the beach. At the east end of the town stood the church, still displaying its ancient structure, of lines of air, original

CURIOUS, HOTEL CUSTOMS IN SWEDEN.

On arriving at the inn, which is good as clean, and makes up some forty beds, we struck with a peculiar set of Alsatian plates. In Sweden, namely, the apparent indifference to visitors exhibited by the proprietor: The head waiter, with attendant droles of port and chamber-maids, waits the first of the guests: The waiter, who sits down at the table, and the traveller must stop for his self his rooms and the information he requires, while the landlord, with his hands in his pockets, regards his efforts from a window with languid curiosity. There is an intentional inactivity, but it appears not to be the custom to welcome the coming guests, although to speed the parting guest there is abundance of many cheerful words and wishes written on the wooden custom of the Smörgåsarträtt at these inns; and dried oysters which throughout Sweden; it consists in a standing refreshment provided at a table for the use of the guests, and comprising: bread and butter, cheese, caviar, dried fish and mince for the sausages; and other similar delicacies, to be taken immediately before each regular meal, and washed down with beer and coffee and spirit drinks. In connection with this custom, which is an objectionable habit, which may be called the communal habit, or the same-impliment party, rapidly from mouth to mouth and from day to day; the rights of private property are flagrantly disregarded.—Fortnightly Review

THE ICONOCLAST MOB IN ANTWERP

CATHEDRAL.

The great altar scene was being held in their city; it was usual during that course for the image of the Virgin to stand in the open nave of the cathedral, that the polaris might see the Virgin and the Virgin might see the polaris. The magistrates, thinking to take advantage from those who sought it, bade the statue be removed into the choir, behind the iron railing of its gable. When the people assembled next day, they found "Our Lady's" usual place deserted. They asked her, in scorn, "why also have I early flown up to the roof?" "Have I taken flight," said they, sarcastically, "or have you retreated within this enclosure?" As "Our Lady" made them no answer, they all turned to the next gable and cried, "Will you join us," said they, "in crying 'Long Live the Beggar?'" It is plain that those who began the iconoclast riots in London were more of Confederates than of Reformers. A mischievously frolicsome and untutored doublet and old battered fiddle accompanied the pulpit, and treated the crowd to a clever caricature of the preaching of the friars. All, however, did not approve of the attempt to entertain the multitude with such trifling and unbecomingly low and unenlightened preaching. The two struggled to throw in the pulpit, and at last both were rolling to the ground. The crowd took part of the ind, and some one drawing danger wounded the sailor. Matters were becoming serious, when the church officials interfered, and with the help of the marges of the city, they succeeded with some difficulty in ejecting the mob, and locking the cathedral doors for the night.—History of

THE UNSPEAKABLE TURE

It is not in the present day somewhat rare to assume that the Turks, whatever their rank, are capable of literary and poetical achievement. Music, painting, and the fine arts generally have not precisely flourished under the Turkish dominion. But poetry, especially philosophy, and the abstract study of history and morality have always been favoured pursuits, and by no means confined to the viziers at Constantinople used at one time to go on back—with their examples of the wit and wisdom of the Turks, as they might be carried home any other specimens of the natural products of the country. Not seldom, however, something good has come out of the coming out of Turkey. The Turk would be locked upon just now as a posterous. The Turk is "anti-human," is "unspeakable"—which latter accusation, inasmuch as the Turk is not a language, is a man, may be more or less true. "Unspokeable" or not, many a word spoken by Englishmen, and by being interpreted, has of such we propose to cite a few from a lecture of Turkish sayings made a hundred years ago by an intelligent English traveller:—

"He that afflicts himself for wh

SYNAGOGUE IN PRAGUE.

There are older buildings in Prague that the Rathhaus tower or the Charles Bridge. There is a Jewish synagogue, which is said by some to have been built by refugees who fled from Prague to escape the destruction of Jerusalem. That, fancy, may be coupled with a legend that claims part of a silver candelabra in the cathedral as having belonged to the temple of Solomon; but it is probable enough that the synagogue dates at least a part of it, from the sixth or seventh century. It is said to be the oldest synagogue in Europe. The interior of the old synagogue building was raised in height and the upper part may, therefore, be said to be modern. We do not know if this was the purpose of giving all the possible antiquity to the appearance of the building that the walls and ceiling are never cleaner, but appear begrimed with the smoke and dust of ages. But one day a missionary agent came to the synagogue, and, in the presence of the rabbi, read in unceremoniously, and did his work, at least to a certain extent without any one being able to stop him. The river overflowed, and, filling the street to the height of several feet, left a belt of white water up to the point it had reached. Our attention was drawn to this by Dr. J. J. J. who, according to the rabbi, was going to do all the matter of English matter, it do all the service it could. The old fellow was evidently an economist, was sparing of words as most his countrymen of ours. Verbs and conjunctions were superfluities, which he scorned. He gave me a lesson what way one may more affectively use a foreign tongue by which one possesses. The older synagogue in words. Part old, part new. Old below, new above. New black, smoke candles. Old white, no flow river. In this synagogue no music, sermon—only prayer. Older synagogue women gather, here women deer, accompanying the last remark with a significant motion of his head toward a small grating or passage, the "only place, said to be the law in the synagogue," said to be 600 years old. One could not but remark that the candles, which were in great numbers round the synagogue, were all cut to snuff length. The explanation was that to extinguish a light on the Sabbath counted a desecration of the Sabbath. The candles are of such length that they burn themselves out about the end of services. Being lit before sundown on Friday evening, there is no desecration committed. —Dr. Blackie, in the "Sunday Magazine."
